Alexandria Gazette.

THURSDAY EVENING, AUGUST 17, 1882.

The Star of Empire Moving Southward. Senator Voorhees, of Indiana, in his late speech in the Senate in opposition to internal taxation, said :-

"It has been said and sung through generations that westward the star of empire takes its way, not the empire of force, but of development, of thought, of industry and of human progress. The course of that star in this community points now in another direction. I see it hovering over the mountains and the plains of the South, the herald of a new and marvelous birth in all that region of richer resources than the globe anywhere else contains.

"I am not here to-day to discuss the politics of the South in the past, but I invoke for her now a policy which will cause her future to shine with a strength and independence and a renown such as she herself never dreamt of in her most ambitious moods. That development of the South, of which she is capable, is but scarcely begun. Ninety-five per cent. of her gigantic natural wealth yet sleeps the sleep of ages, undisturded by the enterprise of the second sec turded by the enterprise of man.

"Let us cross the Potomac and stand for a few minutes together on the soil of Virginia. Virginia is rich enough this hour in all that is most useful in human advancement to pay not only her own debt, but the national debt besides. Wiley, in his extensive and valuable treatise on the iron ore regions of the United States, gives his approval to the startling statement that 'Pennsylvania rich as she is, is poor in iron ores as compared with Virginia.

"The hand of nature gave to Virginia a dower so rich that even Pennsylvania, her great and opulent sister, is poor in comparison. Coal and all other ingredients are also there in profusion for the development of her untold wealth. Will not her people reach forth their hands and appropriate these treasures? When they do the dust of humiliation will be wiped from her brow, and her escutcheon will blaze with a stronger light than ever before.
